

"YOUR face is familiar, but I can't quite place you." Nine out of ten people say that to beautiful Georgia Carroll when they are introduced to her. Reason is that they've seen her picture in innumerable newspapers and magazines. She's one of America's top models. Her photographs, displayed in advertisements, help to glamorize chewing gum, lingerie, and what have you. Summer finds her sweltering in furs in New York studios, and winter finds her sunning on artificial beaches. That's next summer's bathing suit she's sporting on the synthetic beach in our picture, for example. Texas-born, she entered a local beauty contest after graduating from high school. She didn't win, but a commercial photographer spotted her, and that was better. He persuaded her to try New York. First week's modeling earned her $50, fourth week $200, and she's been doing okay ever since. She'd give it up for only one other career—marriage.

American
March, 1940: p. 80

OldMagazineArticles.com