

The New York Times.

August 9, 1918

The Suffrage Disorders.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"The world will indeed look with amazement upon the spectacle," as Miss Paul said—not of the arrest of the suffragists, but that they should choose this time for their attack upon the President. Have these women nothing more serious to do now than to annoy and molest the head of the nation, the nation of which "they are ashamed"? Those of us who can find better things to do are ashamed of them. Let them learn a lesson from the English suffragists.

MARION DELCOMYN.

New York, Aug. 7, 1918.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The shocking, selfish lawlessness of the suffrage women in Washington inciting to riot and disorder at this critical time calls for drastic regulation and punishment—their arrest on misdemeanor charges simply means more "spotlight" and notoriety for these neurasthenic women.

S. J. DAYTON.

Trenton, N. J., Aug. 7, 1918.