RUCKSACKS

The Rucksack is not so general a feature of an Officer's equipment since the Army Order of January 22, 1914 (see page 19), but particulars are given, as when permissible to be worn, it has advantages over the pack. It is lighter and the weight is evenly distributed over the back instead of on the shoulders alone, and it is shed by the wearer at any opportunity for a rest. When worn in conjunction with the Thresher Leather-drill Sam Browne (see page 19) there is no danger of an Officer being "a marked man" by reason of conspicuous appearance. It has advantages over the web equipment, as it is perfectly waterproof and does not shrink and stretch.
